Þeodric héht folcgesipas healdan þone hereric, Met. 1, 70.

folc-gestealla. Substitute: A comrade in arms (? cf. fyrd-gestealla):—Bigstandað mé strange geneátas, þá ne willað mé æt þám stríðe geswicán . . . hié habbað mé to hucarran gecorene . . . mid swilcum mæg man ræð gefeucan, fón mid swilcum folcgesteallan (=um?) with such may one devise counsel, take (counsel) with such comrades, Gen. 287.

folc-gætæl. Substitute: The number of a people or army (v. folc; I. 1 a):—Wes on áfra gehwám álesen under lindum on folcgetæl fiftig cista in each tribe were picked out for service, elected into the number of the folk that should fight, fifty troops, Exod. 229.

folc-geþrang. Dele. See ge-þringan.

folc-her[e]þap, es; m. The public road, highway:—On ðone folc-herþap; onðlang ðæs hearþades, C. D. iii. 393, 14: 463, 17. Cf. þeod-herþap.

folcisc. Add: (1) popular, with which all people are concerned:—Folcisc gemót, Ll. Th. i. 326, 21. (2) of the common people:—Folcisce men secgaþ þæt ælce reþu wyrd sié yfel, Bt. 40, 2; F. 248, 6. ¶ on folcisc in common, popular language:—Lytel fugel, se is on folcisc (unilgo) þrostle gehátan, Gr. D. 100, 19; 141, 27. (3) of the clergy, secular (in contrast with regular):—Gif man folciscne mæssepreóst mid tihltan belecege þe regollif næbbe (cf. gif man mæssepreóst tihltige þe regollisce libbe, 11), Ll. Th. i. 344, 19.

folc-lagu a law that is valid for all the people of a country, a law of the nation:—Godes gerihtha wanedan innan þysse þeode on æghwylcum ende, and folclaga wyrseadan (the laws deteriorated), Wlft. 158, 6.

folc-land. Add:—Gif se cyning minum suna geunnan wille ðes folc-londes tó ðæm béclonde, ðonne habbe and brífce, C. D. ii. 120, 35. Cyninges folcland, 65, 1. See also p. ix, and N. E. D. folk-land.

folc-lár. For 'Cot. . . . Lye' substitute:—Folclære omeliae uerba, Wrt. Voc. ii. 65, 42. In þám folclárum þæs godspelles (in homiliis euangelii), Gr. D. 290, 10: 286, 7.

folc-leásung. Add: uttering false and slanderous statements such as are prejudicial to the public welfare. Slander, as affecting an individual, which entailed the same penalty as that for folk-leásung, is treated in the following:—Só þe óðerne mid wóge forseccan wille, þæt hē ádor oþþe feó oþþe fremre þe wyrssa sý . . . sý hē his tungan scyldig, Ll. Th. i. 266, 22-25; 384, 23-26 (de poena conuictorum). See also L. Hen. I. c. 34, § 7; 59, § 13. Folcleásung seems to be the same crime as that referred to in later lawbooks, quoted Ll. Th. i. 82, 'Sunt quaedam atroces injuriae . . . sicut de inventoribus malorum rumorum, unde pax possit exterminari.' Cf. too leasing-maker in Scotch law, one who utters untrue and slanderous statements such as are likely to prejudice the relations between the king and his subjects. But perhaps the public character of the crime, indicated by folc, may consist in the false and slanderous statements being made to a court of law. Cf. L. Hen. I. c. 34, § 7: Qui aliquem erga justiciam accusabit . . . et mendacium denique pernoscat, linguam perdat. Cf. folc-wöh.

folc-lic. Add: (1) that concerns the whole people, public, national:—Hī woldon ferian mid folclicum wurdmynte þone hālgan lichaman, and læcan innan þære cyrcan they wanted to give the body a public funeral, Hml. folc-riht. Add:—Ne læte hē næfre his hýrmen hýne ofer wealdan (oferwealdan?), ac wilde (wille, MS.) hē ælene mid hláfordes creafte and mid folcrihte, Angl. ix. 260, 29. [Þæt hē] wiþ heora folcrihte feala worhte (cf. hunc inuenimus subuertentem gentem nostram . . . conuouet populum, Lk. 23, 2, 5), Bl. H. 177, 22. Ðær ne gebyrðt an ðam lande an folcæs folcryht tó lefænnæ rúmæs bútan twigen fýt tó fýasdrypc, C. D. ii. 89, 7. Ðæt hyra nán ne wandode ne for minan lifian ne for minum ege ðæt hý ðæt folcriht árehton that none of them either for love or fear of me hesitated to declare the law, 114, 1.

folc-scearu. Add:—Þis þincet gerisne þæt þú þe áferige of þisse folcsceare; þú þas werþeode feorran gesóhtest, Gen. 2477. Is cūð hwanon þám ordfruman ædelu onwócon; hē wæs áfeded on þysse folcsceare, An. 684. Wæs gefræge in þære folcsceare, geond þa werþeode wide læded, mære morgenspel, El. 968. ¶ in B. 73 Kemble would take folc-scearu=folc-land public land, C. D. ii. p. ix.

folc-sóþe the plain truth (?):—Ic secge hēr beforan eow eallum folcsóð I say here before you all the plain and simple truth, Hml. S. 23, 666. Cf. folc-wöh.

folc-stede. Add: a battle-place, battle-field (v. folc; I. 1 a); Ædelst. 41: Jud. 320: Rá. 6, 11: B. 1463: Gen. 2000.

folc-stoga. Add: v. folc; II. 5.

(6) terms made with an enemy of the law, inlawing of an outlaw. Cf. frif-leās:—Sē þe ūtlages weorc gewyre, wealde se cuning þæs frides (qui opus ullagii fecerit, ejus revocatio sit in misericordia regis, Lat. version), Ll. Th. i. 382, 19. v. ciric-, deor-, mæpel-, un-, weorold-frif.

frif. Substitute: Fair:—Mec (the cuckoo) seó frife mæg (the bird that hatches the cuckoo's egg) fēdde oð þæt ic āweox the fair lady (cf. freolec mæg used of a woman) nurtured me, till I grew up, Rū. 10, 9. [Icel. frifr fair, beautiful.]

frif-āp, es; m. An oath confirming peace made between two hostile powers:—Ðā þæt gafol gelest wæs and þā fridādas gesworene, þā tōferde se here, Chr. 1012; P. 143, 5.

frif-bēna a criminal who asks for asylum, v. frif, (5 b a), or for reconciliation with the law, v. frif, (6).

frif-bræc. Substitute:—frif-bræc, -bræc, e; f. A breach of the peace concluded between two hostile peoples (English and Danes):—Gyf eahta man beon ofslagene, þonne is þ fridbræc, binnan byrig oþþon būton . . . Be fridbræce binnan byrig. Gyf hit binnan byrig gedōn bið, seó fridbræc, Ll. Th. i. 286, 25-30. [This is part of the arrangement (v. frif-māl) made by the English with the Danes under Anlaf.]

frif-candel. Add: The light that affords protection and security from molestation, as evil spirits and influences ceased to operate at sunrise. Cf. for example the Latin hymn with its gloss:—Tungel scinþ nū niwe þ hit nyme ælc þing derigendlices sidus refulget jam novum ut tollat omne noxium, Hy. S. 37, 14.

frif-guard. Add: (1) an enclosure where a fugitive was secure from molestation, where he had frif (v. frif, (5 b a)), an asylum [v. Grmm. R. A.], Ll. Th. ii. 208, 16. (2) a place where peace prevails. v. frif, (1), Crī. 399. v. frif-splott.

frif-her[e]pap, es; m. The king's highway, a public road which was under the king's frif. [Cf. De pace regia et .i.iii. chiniunor vel viarium regalium, Ll. Th. i. 447, 6. Omnes herestrete regis sunt, 519, 11:—On Wifese ford; ðonne andlang dæs fridherpades (Icknield Way?), C. D. v. 214, 35.]

ge-. Add: Both ge- and gi- are used in the oldest glossaries: e.g. on p. 4S of O. E. T. nine words with the prefix occur; in four cases both the Epinal and Erfurt glosses have gi-, in one they have ge-, in two the Epinal has ge- where the Erfurt has gi-, and in two the Epinal has gi- where the other has ge-. In each case the Corpus Gloss. has ge-. In this glossary, however, gi- is found, e.g. gi-brec, 2152, and in later glossaries also, e.g. gi-mynd, Wrt. Voc. ii. 53, 73. Besides the forms given may be noted ga-æddum, Erf. 75; gy-byrdid, Ep. 228. In the Durham Ritual the regular form is gi-.

Archiv cxii, p. 248), Bl. H. 163, 10-13. The original is so imperfectly reproduced by the translation, that it is difficult to connect the several corresponding parts, and to understand what the translation means. To hospitium corresponds (though it does not properly translate it) gastlíþnes; perhaps to metatum (not metatum) corresponds gifernes = (P) ge-férnes. Though ge-férnes does not occur elsewhere, yet on the analogy of ge-leórnas transitus, ge-leóran transitiv, it might serve as a gloss to metatus alongside ge-féran meare. Gi- for ge- is not used in Bl. H., but gy- occurs once, in gy-fýlnes, 145, 16. Mr. Bradley suggests the emendation seó gísternes gebíennes as translating domicilium. Dr. Max Förster suggests gífe[n]nes. v. ge-léd, -loed, -leod, gloed glosses catasta (catasta instrumentum torquendi, genus lecti ferrei, quo, impositis Christianis, ignis supponebatur, Migne):—Catasta, genus supplicii vel woepce, eculoe simile, nomen ludi vel geléd, quadrupalium, Wrt. Voc. ii. 129, 45. Geloed (gloed, Ep. geleod, Erf.) catasta, Txs. 47, 363. ¶ The same obscure word seems intended in the following two (not independent) glosses:—Gæled catesta, Wrt. Voc. i. 288, 24: ii. 17, 5. Of the five forms which here gloss catasta the only one to which a meaning may easily be given is gloed, which elsewhere translates carbo. This form might apply to the fire used in the form of torture denoted by catasta. There seems no root with which to connect -léd-, mutated forms of which would appear as -loed-, -léd-, -leod-(?) and gæled looks like a gloss to cantot.
